STORM DELIVERS UNUSUAL SCULPTURE TO CARMEL BEACH

By TAMARA GRIPPI

AN IMMENSE, gnarled driftwood — recently hoisted off Carmel Beach to prevent it from smashing into the sea wall protecting Scenic Road — has become a much-admired piece of artwork along the city's oceanfront walking path.

In fact, so many people have contacted Mayor Sue McCloud and the city's forestry department that they are considering leaving nature's artwork next to the pathway permanently.

McCloud is encouraging Carmelites to suggest a name for the unique sea sculpture as well as its permanent place of honor. Ideas can be submitted to the city's suggestion box at city hall.

The massive wooden tangle currently adorns the Scenic Road footpath between 13th Avenue and Santa Lucia Street. One resident has already suggested it be dubbed, "Gift from the Sea."

This ten-foot-tall piece of driftwood will get name and a permanent place of honor somewhere in town, if local artists are heeded. The wood washed up in a recent storm.

"It's a sculpture of incredible beauty," said Renati Mannan, one of several local artists who were intrigued by the driftwood. "There's obviously a move to make sure that it stays, whether in its present spot or somewhere else. It definitely is a work of art."

Mannan was on the scene Nov. 15 as Iverson Tree Service crews hired by the city used a large crane to lift the wooden knot from the beach to the top of the bluff.

"It was so heavy even the rear wheels of the crane lifted up," Mannan said.

What ballot measure?

■ Despite big defeat at polls, water board wants even more power

By MARY BROWNFIELD

UNFAZED BY the no-confidence vote of 19,325 Peninsula residents earlier this month, the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District board voted Monday to expand its regulation of wells in rural parts of Carmel Valley and to begin the process of taking over Cal-Am Water Company.

The two moves — which would greatly increase the jurisdiction of the water district — were made at the board's first regular meeting after the Nov. 5 election, when voters backed a ballot measure by a 2-to-1 margin that called for the water district to be dissolved.

'It may have escaped your notice, but two weeks ago the people you serve decided 2-to-1 you're doing a lousy job. Now you're finding more activities to do a lousy job at. Don't move forward with this.'

— Bob McKenzie

"Measure B is meaningless. Twenty-thousand people voted for it, but I still consider that to be meaningless," said director Zan Henson, a staunch advocate of giving the board more power.

Henson said it wasn't clear whether Measure B was a vote against the current water board, or against the board's 24-year history of failing to produce any new water.

"I was elected to try to do something on this water board and I'm going to try to do it," he said.

Henson's allies on the water board, Judi Lehman, Kris Lindstrom and Molly Erickson, participated in the three-hour meeting without mentioning Measure B.

Only director David Pendergrass indicated any interest in the landslide, saying he thought the high voter turnout meant it should not be taken "too lightly."

More well permits

With its vote to approve Ordinance 105 this week, the water district took the first step toward giving itself control over many more water wells in the Carmel River watershed. Before last year, the district didn't interfere in plans for wells at individual

Will state hit cities' wallets again?

By TAMARA GRIPPI

AS CALIFORNIA faces a $6 billion budget deficit this year and a projected $15 billion shortfall next year, cities and counties — frequent targets of state budget-balancing maneuvers — are keeping a wary eye on Sacramento.

California cities and counties have already taken more than a $1 billion hit in the 2002/2003 state budget signed by Governor Gray Davis in September.

While the City of Carmel was able to avoid the hammer so far, Monterey County's preliminary loss already stands at $4.8 million — a result of the state cutting funding for local programs, decreasing reimbursements for state mandates and taking a larger share of the county's property taxes.

County communications coordinator Maia Carroll said the county is bracing for even more severe cuts, which may come during the state's mid-year budget review in January.

"Most counties know that the legislature did a band-aid solution," Carroll said. "They really didn't tackle it head on because the number was so staggering and they needed to get through the November election. Now we're really going to see the full picture of the fallout."

County administrative officer Sally Reed has already given the department heads a tough assignment — to figure out how they could cut 25 percent from their budgets if the county's worst fears are realized.

History repeats itself?

Now the cities, already hard hit by the recession, are extremely concerned about the state's next move, said Deanna Sessums, Monterey Bay regional representative of the League of California Cities. "We recognize that all the easy solutions have already happened," she said.

A look at recent history doesn't offer much encouragement to the cities.

During the recession of the early 1990s, California was having a difficult time meeting the minimum for education spending set by Proposition 98.

In order to meet that obligation, the state claimed a larger share of the cities' property taxes — diverting that money to the state's

MARATHON CLINIC PREPS RUNNERS ONE STEP AT A TIME

By MARY BROWNFIELD

THE THRILL of conquering 26.2 miles of the world's most stunning terrain attracts walkers and runners of all types to the Big Sur International Marathon every April. To help turn the daunting long-distance trek into a beatable feat, marathon organizers are offering their free training program again this year.

The first session took place this week, but it's not too late to join by attending the next clinic, set for 7 p.m. on Dec. 3 in conference rooms A, B and C at Community Hospital of the Monterey Peninsula, according to clinic organizer and veteran runner Mike Dove. And all who attend eight of the remaining 10 sessions can get a coveted spot in the marathon even though the race has officially sold out.

About 140 people attended the standing-room-only meeting Nov. 19 and more than half of them had never before run a marathon.

"There were a lot of new faces, which is good," he said. "And all sizes and shapes."

The Tuesday-night clinics, offered about every other week between now and race day April 27, include experts who will talk about everything from the basics of marathoning to diet and nutrition, injury prevention, and even the use of heart monitors.

Accompanying the clinic again this year is the training manual, available at www.bsim.org for $15 and to clinic participants for $10, with the money going to charity. The book includes materials furnished by each session's speaker, but nothing can replace the camaraderie and information athletes learn during the sessions themselves, Dove said.

"Things happen in the clinics which you can't get out of the book, like interesting stories about running, advice and people's own experiences," he said. "Plus, they meet other people who they can run or walk with."

And there are additional bonuses, like the snacks CHOMP provides (even though it already donates the meeting space), the Turtle Bay coupons, and the 20 percent discounts on shoes and heart monitors sold at The Treadmill.

After the marathon, clinic members will gather one last time April 29 for the Marathon Success Party, where they will feast together and share their stories of conquering the Big Sur Coast.

For more information on the clinic and for a complete schedule of sessions and topics, call the marathon office at 625-6226, or simply show up Dec. 3 at 7 p.m. in conference rooms A, B and C at CHOMP.

Know a runner in South Dakota?

RUNNERS FROM all over the United States and the world have rushed to grab spots in the 18th running of the Big Sur International Marathon April 27. The 26.2-mile race, the 21-mile PowerWalk, the 10.6-mile Walk and the Relay are all sold out.

But one state — South Dakota — remains unrepresented in the big run, so marathon organizers decided to save a bib for the first runner from the Mount Rushmore State to sign up by calling 625-6226.

REAL ESTATE ON THE PENINSULA
BY JOHN S. LEVINSON

THINKING IN A SAUNA

Consider the following situations:

1. Someone has offered you a substantial amount of money for your home. The deal is very appealing. However, they need you to make up your mind immediately because they have to move to your area, they have limited time to find and purchase their new home, and if you don't accept their offer, they have two other homes to make offers on.

2. The real estate agents representing four buyers are sitting with you and your real estate advisor at your dining room table. Each of them has presented a reasonable and attractive offer, and your real estate professional turns to you and asks, "How do you wish to respond?"

3. You are one of the buyers being represented in the above offer presentation. Your real estate advisor rushes out to you with a counter offer saying that you must respond (read: accept) the counteroffer's terms quickly or another buyer will get the home.

Pass the Rolaids! These are not the times to wing it. The fact is, a good real estate advisor will have talked through these eventualities with you, along with a discussion of the likely market value of your home and your own personal needs regarding the sale of your property. With a good advisor, you will already have a game plan...and the sauna won't get too hot! Qestions? Call John Levinson at 659-8002.

Paid parking shelved, for now

By TAMARA GRIPPI

THE CARMEL City Council stopped short of rejecting paid parking Nov. 20 though councilman Dick Ely joined the voices of two other skeptics on the council.

Despite the apparent majority in favor of killing the plan, the council decided to hold off on a vote on the potential $1 million moneymaker until it has explored two other ideas to offset city expenses — a business improvement district and a stormwater utility fee.

Ely said he was very concerned the paid parking proposal — which would call for the installation of 118 to 135 parking kiosks downtown — underestimated expenses and was too optimistic about income.

"I feel that revenue projections have been grossly overestimated," said Ely, who shared his own calculations showing much more conservative profits for the city. "If I had to vote on it tonight, I would vote against it."

Councilwoman Paula Hazdovac responded by telling Ely "it would probably be a good idea," for him to weigh in now, "because we're wasting staff's time."

"I talk to people a lot and, overall, they favor paid parking," she said, noting that Carmel's current 90-minute parking limit hurts retails businesses. "We are losing sales tax revenue because people do not have the time to stay in town to do the things they need to do."

After receiving a report from city administrator Rich Guillen showing the city's expenditures will exceed its revenues in 2005, several council members contended that the city will have to make some tough decisions in the near future.

"What we're looking at having to [pick from] what may be equally untenable or undesirable revenue generators," Ely said.

Guillen also provided the city with a list of all the capital improvement projects on hold because the city doesn't have the money to pay for them.

According to a report presented by financial consultant Paul Wood, paid parking could gross as much as $1.8 million annually if the city approves the original proposal for 135 pay stations.

If the city opts for the abbreviated version of the plan, making use of 118 kiosks, it would take in $1.6 million a year.

The city would have to spend $858,000 a year in operating costs in addition to $1.2 million worth of start up costs.

Wood estimated the city's profit could range from $780,000 to $1 million a year.

But Ely doubted the accuracy of the figures. And, in response to public criticism of the plan, the council changed several aspects of the paid parking proposal currently on the table by removing the employee parking areas of town that had been designated, establishing a maximum three-hour limit and setting 10 a.m. as the hour when paid parking would begin.

One aspect not yet decided is how much to charge residents for an annual permit that would allow them to park anywhere in town.

Councilman Gerard Rose and Councilwoman Barbara Livingston reiterated their opposition to paid parking.

Rose objected to the costs, equipment and new employees needed to get the program up and running.

"If we add nine or 10 policemen or public safety officers, that's a staggering change to the way we do business in Carmel," Rose said. "This is the classic example of the cure being worse than the disease."

Livingston argued that "no amount of money can replace lost ambiance," noting that 2,000 people have signed a petition opposing the venture.

Instead of paid parking, Livingston suggested the city designate 400 free employee parking spots on the outskirts of downtown and ask property owners require in their leases that employees not park in the commercial district.

Ultimately, the council followed Carmel Mayor Sue McCloud's suggestion to set paid parking aside for the time being and turn its attention to the two other competing proposals to keep the city out of the red.

McCloud also suggested the questions brought up by Ely be forwarded to the company that initially conducted the paid parking estimates for Carmel.

The public's reaction at the meeting provided few surprises. Most of the people who spoke opposed paid parking, though a few stood up to simply ask questions.

Alan Williams called the council's attention to a newspaper article describing how the City of St. Petersburg, Fla., installed 225 of the parking kiosks and later removed them after the program soured.

St. Petersburg sold half the kiosks back the vendor and paid for the rest to be stored in a warehouse, Williams said.

Clyde Sturges, owner of the Briarwood Inn, suggested the council could raise its 10 percent transient occupancy tax to augment city revenues.

Instead of paying $500,000 for the staff needed to run paid parking, the city wouldn't have to pay anything to raise TOT, Sturges argued.

He noted that other cities have a much higher TOT than Carmel. "If you go to Disneyland, you pay 15 percent, in San Francisco you pay 14 percent."

Guillen noted that any increase in TOT would required a vote of the people. He also explained that due to a recent court ruling, a stormwater utility tax would also have to go to a vote.

because the boy's 15-year-old passenger was injured in the wreck, according to Monterey Police Sgt. Jose Figueroa. Although both boys reportedly cut classes and were drinking beer in the middle of the school day, the passenger was considered "stuck in the circumstances" and was not cited.

"I think he's probably paid his debt to society in bumps and bruises," Figueroa said of the passenger, who told police he had wanted to jump out of the car after the chase began, but never had the chance. "He won't be cited, but we hope his parents will take care of [disciplining him], and probably the school will."

The accident occurred after Todd Kessler, a Monterey cop assigned to Monterey High, recognized the driver of a 1993 green Nissan Altima near the school as a student who had no license. Kessler and Monterey County Juvenile Probation Officer Ken Murphy — who is also assigned to the high school — tried to pull the 17-year-old driver over, according to Figueroa. Instead of stopping, the boy took off.

"Who knows why people do things like that?" Kessler said. "He knew he was unlicensed and had been arrested for that before, so he just decided to run."

Leading police from the high school onto southbound Highway 1, the teens apparently exited at Carpenter and ended up on the twisting streets of Carmel Woods. Trying to make a left turn, the driver lost control of the car and careened into a yard, smashing a large branch off an oak tree. With both boys injured, the car came to rest beside a house on Camino del Monte. The corner of the house was damaged, but no one else was injured.

Rescue crews from Cypress Fire and AMR extricated the two boys from the crushed Nissan, loaded them onto stretchers and took them to Community Hospital of the Monterey Peninsula. Figueroa said they were treated for facial lacerations, bumps and bruises, but appeared otherwise unharmed. The driver was cited at the hospital and both teens released to their parents.

"The true message is drinking and driving is a problem with teenagers, and they don't understand the consequences of how bad an action that really is — how many people they are putting at risk — especially when it involves a police chase like that," Figueroa said. "Everybody is in danger, including the pursuing officers."

California Highway Patrol officers joined MPD in the pursuit and are also investigating the accident while Monterey police handle the criminal case.

Seized drug money will help pay for stun guns, dog collars, I.D. system and cameras

By MARY BROWNFIELD

NEW STUN guns, electric dog collars, employee I.D. and security systems, laptops, digital cameras and vehicles made up a sheriff's department's shopping list approved by the board of supervisors last month.

A chunk of the $152,400 approved Oct. 22 by the board to make the buys comes from money and valuables seized during drug raids. After a case has been tried and the suspects convicted, the money is divided among law enforcement, the district attorney's office, the state's general fund and local prosecutors, according to Felipe Navarro, finance manager for the sheriff's department.

"After a certain amount is collected, under the law it can only be used for equipment related to law enforcement," he said.

Tapping into the asset forfeiture fund and a few grants, the sheriff's department plans to spend:

- $53,000 on two 2003 Dodge Ram pickup trucks, one for the marijuana eradication team and the other for the Multi-Agency Detail for Commercial Auto Theft Program;
- $8,000 for three laptops and mounting hardware for installation in the MADCAT vehicles;
- $3,000 for five Tri-Tronics 500 Pro-XL electric dog collars used in training the department's K-9 unit;
- $7,000 on 15 digital cameras for crime scene investigations;
- $38,400 for 60 Advanced Taser M25 stun guns and accessories for use by the 146 deputies and 70 supervisors in the Monterey County Jail;
- $15,000 to replace the current employee identification system with a key card that will allow building access and also include personnel photos; and
- $28,000 for a new vehicle for the civil unit, which accumulates a lot of mileage and subsequent maintenance costs during the process of serving restraining orders, eviction notices and other court-related documents, according to deputy Bill Cassara.

Mid-Coast Fire will finally get a home of its own

By MARY BROWNFIELD

THE MID-COAST Fire Brigade — that band of volunteers that responds to fires, cliff rescues and car wrecks along a big stretch of the Big Sur Coast — has never had a firehouse, even though it has been around for 25 years.

But that's finally going to change.

The crew officially broke ground on its new fire station at the top of Murray Grade in Palo Colorado Nov. 16 and hopes to get construction going within a month, according to Mid-Coast Fire Chief Cheryl Goetz.

'It's a very small organization. We're always looking for people — young people — and it's really our hope the attention the firehouse gets and the energy around building it will bring in more interest from community members to become firefighters.'

— Rob Carver

"The fire brigade was formed in '78 and we have been planning for a fire station ever since," she said. Money hasn't come easy for the all-volunteer squad, which relies on donations from residents, businesses and community groups in addition to the $22,000 in state funds it gets via the county each year.

That doesn't leave much for a firehouse — but the brigade has managed to collect more than $300,000 for the $450,000 building project. Donors have also offered time or building materials.

Garrapata Canyon resident and architect Rob Carver, a former Mid-Coast volunteer, took on the job of designing the firehouse pro-bono.

"It's hard to say no to a really good cause, and it's a really, really good cause," he said. "I was a volunteer firefighter for eight years with the brigade, so of course I wanted to design their firehouse."

He said the simple two-story stucco building topped with a metal roof will include offices and a meeting room upstairs, with space for three vehicles below. He dealt with the steep slope of the property — donated by Marshal Rothman — by designing the building so it cuts into the hillside and the second floor sits at ground level. The driveway circles two large redwoods.

"The reason we chose this site is that it's at the top of a hill and goes downhill in both directions, so we can always start our fire trucks," said Carver.

And he drew the firehouse plans so the construction could be done — and paid for — in phases. "We don't have enough money to build the whole thing — just enough to get started," he said. "It's designed so we can have it function as a firehouse and not finish out the upstairs."

Goetz said donations from Rocky Point Restaurant, the Big Sur International Marathon and numerous others made the groundbreaking possible, but the efforts don't stop there. Fire brigade members and volunteers will also build the firehouse.

"This will be a big community project when it gets going," she said.

Once finished, the Mid-Coast Fire Station will likely become the information hub during the natural disasters which Carver said tend to hit about every decade. And the need for help, not only on the firehouse project but on the brigade itself, never subsides.

"It's a very small organization. We're always looking for people — young people — and it's really our hope the attention the firehouse gets and the energy around building it will bring in more interest from community members to become firefighters," Carver said.

MEN IN WHITE SPACESUITS LAND ON LIBRARY ROOF

By TAMARA GRIPPI

DONNING PROTECTIVE gear that looks like spacesuits, workers removed the original roof from the library's Park Branch this week.

Protection from hazardous materials was necessary because a layer of waterproof paper beneath the shingles of the old roof contained more than 2 percent asbestos, according to Carmel Building Official Tim Meroney.

Meroney explained that the contractor, Scudder Roofing, uses a safe procedure for removing the material by wetting down the paper, folding it into bundles and immediately putting it in plastic bags.

"There is no health hazard and no danger to the occupants or the public," Meroney said. "That's why the library has been able to remain open.

"Believe it or not, this practice goes on all over town, but people are paying more attention to this one because it's in a high-profile location."

The roofers, who started work this week, will probably spend another two weeks finishing the $98,000 project.

The new roof will be "composite shake" — fireproof, synthetic shingles designed to look like wood.

Meroney said the library branch — which serves as the city's children's library — was badly in need of a new roof.

"The original roof was actually peeling off the building," he said. "This year we would have had serious damage to the building. We couldn't wait any longer."

The roofing project was one of this year's few planned capital improvements the city council was able to salvage in the midst of the bleak economy.

The children's library, located at Mission Street and Sixth Avenue, was originally built in 1971 as the Crocker Bank. In 1987, during former Mayor Clint Eastwood's administration, the city bought the building.

'The original roof was actually peeling off the building. This year we would have had serious damage to the building. We couldn't wait any longer.'

VALLEY SPEED LIMITS WILL CONTINUE IRKING MOTORISTS, AT LEAST UNTIL 2004

By MARY BROWNFIELD

DRIVERS FRUSTRATED by Carmel Valley Road's ever-changing speed limits and the tickets they get for failing to heed the proper one will just have to be patient. Although he recently received petitions signed by dozens of residents protesting the speed limits put in place last year, Monterey County Public Works Director Lew Bauman said nothing will change before mid-2004.

That's because Carmel Valley Road is part of the statewide double-fine-zone pilot program, and the county must collect data on car wrecks through the end of next year. For that information to be accurate, no conditions related to speed limits on the road can change, according to Bauman.

"We are seeing a reduction in the number of accidents," he said. "But we want to continue gathering numbers and work with the state on the double-fine-zone statistics, and it's important not to change speed limits during that analysis."

Petition drive

The long-debated issue arose again when valley resident John King began collecting signatures of people frustrated by the road's frequently fluctuating speed limits. He took his signed petitions to a meeting with 5th District Supervisor Dave Potter and Bauman earlier this month.

"We recapped the history and strong community and board support to reduce speed limits along the roadway and reviewed the California Vehicle Code and the provisions by which speed limits are set," Bauman said.

Those factors — prevailing speeds, road conditions and accident statistics — dictated the current shifts from 45 mph to 55 mph to 50 mph to 45 mph to 50 mph to 45 mph to 55 mph that occur at various spots along Carmel Valley Road between Highway 1 and Robinson Canyon Road.

The speed limits took effect in August 2001 after numerous hearings which were prompted by residents concerned about the role of speeding in fatal traffic accidents at Via Mallorca.

Public works initially proposed a constant 45 mph speed limit between Carmel Rancho Boulevard and Mid-Valley Shopping Center in July 2000, but soon learned that a state law designed to prevent arbitrary, revenue-generating speed traps requires a traffic and engineering study to justify reductions in speed limits.

That study yielded the changes approved by the board of supervisors in June 2001. An Assembly bill specifically written to include the county road in the state highway system's double-fine-zone program passed later that year, with the new enforcement beginning in January 2002.

"We understand that due to the changing nature of the road, it can be confusing, particularly to drivers unfamiliar with the area," Bauman admitted. After the study period is over, "we will review the data and the improvements we've made along the road and will reevaluate the double-fine zones and the speed limits," he said.

Designer says time's up on Scout House offer

By TAMARA GRIPPI

CARMEL HOME designer John Mandurrago's offer to donate 1,000 square feet of land to the the City of Carmel as an inexpensive wheelchair access path to the Scout House is no longer on the table.

Mandurrago, the co-owner of two lots totaling 5,000 square feet adjacent to Scout House at Junipero and Eighth, said he could no longer wait for the city council to make up its mind about the venture.

"They never could make a decision on whether or not they really wanted to do it," Mandurrago said. "We spent a year trying to accommodate them."

Carmel Mayor Sue McCloud didn't want to share the details of the council's closed session negotiations about the arrangement, but said the council had some concerns that needed to be addressed before a decision could be made.

Mandurrago and his partner, Don Mackey, offered to donate 1,000 square feet of land that would provide a level entrance to Scout House from Junipero — and help the building comply with Americans with Disabilities Act standards.

In return, Mandurrago and Mackey wanted the city to waive city planning fees and grant them the floor area ratio allowed on the full 5,000 square feet for their condominium project that would be built on the remaining 4,000 square feet.

The designer pointed out that the city would be able to avoid the expense of installing an elevator to make Scout House accessible for wheelchairs. However, the city probably would still have to build a new doorway in the rear of the building, undertake some interior improvements and designate a new handicapped parking place on Junipero.

Currently, people have to climb stairs to enter Scout House. Even the driveway, which opens onto Eighth Avenue, is too steep to accommodate wheelchairs.

McCloud said the city was concerned about the impact of the project on the nearby Cobblestone Inn. "We were just concerned about the noise factor for the inn and how lights might impact their building."

The mayor added that those issues weren't "deal breakers," though she would have liked to see them resolved.

"The door was left open," McCloud said.

When Mandurrago presented his idea to the council last March, members were initially enthusiastic. Some members had originally hoped the Cobblestone Inn would allow its cement pathway to be utilized as part of the project.

Time is money

Mandurrago said he was making $60,000 annual interest payments on the property while waiting for the council to make up its mind.

"We needed to know if we should design around the easement," he said. "So we had to move forward and make a decision.

The designer said he didn't fault the city, which made an "honest effort" to investigate his proposal.

"I think we both realized that something that seems like an easy thing to do can become difficult and complicated," Mandurrago said. "There is more than what meets the eye."

Make new friends at community Thanksgiving dinners

By MARY BROWNFIELD

WHETHER RICH or poor, fat or thin, tall or short, alone or not, you are invited to feast for free in Carmel Valley, Cachagua or Monterey this Thanksgiving. Volunteers will work culinary magic with food donated by generous folks to create the traditional, no-charge dinners offered Nov. 28.

"We've been doing it for several years and have it under our belts," said organizer Dorothy McEwen of the Carmel Valley Thanksgiving, during which volunteers will serve about 800 meals to valley residents who show up at two locations or who need dinner delivered.

"We try to make it as much like home as possible, with real plates and silverware, a buffet table with candles and flowers, and some activities for the kids," she said. Last year's surprise performers included a harpist, a clown, a bagpiper and drummers.

The Carmel Valley Community Thanksgiving Dinners will run 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. at 25 Ford Road in the village and 37210 Nason Road in Cachagua.

Kiwanis Club of Monterey member Michael Fields, who has served as director of the Annual Community Thanksgiving Dinner in Monterey for the past eight years, said volunteers will prepare about 2,300 meals to be served at the fairgrounds starting at noon or delivered to homebound folks by the Sand City Police Department.

"We welcome anyone who wants to come join us for dinner or help out," Fields said. "It's not a meal for the homeless — we don't check people's wallets to see if they have money or are poor. Everyone's welcome, and nobody's turned away for any reason."

Donations needed

Food donations are the lifeblood of these free feasts, according to McEwen and Fields.

Monterey's chief cook, Jeff Parker, will oversee the preparation of about 100 turkeys, a couple dozen hams, 500 pounds of potatoes, 10 cases of celery and carrots and a few hundred loaves of bread for the stuffing, and hundreds of pies, cakes and cookies for dessert, according to Fields.

"So the numbers will be large all around," he said.

The Monterey community dinner relies upon folks dropping off turkeys, hams, bread, desserts, vegetables and other foodstuffs at Del Monte Produce in Monterey at 2400 Del Monte Avenue. Frozen turkeys should arrive by Tuesday in order to have plenty of time to thaw, and volunteers will also be at the Monterey Fairgrounds from 9 a.m. onward beginning Wednesday, Nov. 27, to accept donations there. In addition to food, Fields said organizers would also be grateful for donations of decorations, paper products, and clothing for those in need.

'Everyone's welcome, and nobody's turned away for any reason.'

— Michael Fields, Kiwanis Club of Monterey

Under the direction of A Moveable Feast owner Michael Jones, volunteers will prepare donated foods for the Carmel Valley Thanksgiving dinners, according to McEwen, and donors can drop off non-perishable goods like white and sweet potatoes, onions, cranberry sauce, olives, pickles, canned pumpkin and pumpkin pie mix, condensed milk, apple juice and other traditional Thanksgiving fare at the mid-valley and village fire stations. Pies — homemade are especially appreciated — can be dropped off at the Carmel Valley and Cachagua community centers after 10 a.m. Thanksgiving day, and anyone wishing to donate a turkey should call 659-2640. Volunteers are also needed all week and should call the same number for more information.

McEwen said anyone who plans to attend the Carmel Valley dinners should make a reservation by calling 659-2640 so volunteers know how much food to make, but she added that drop-ins are always welcome, too.

And of course, both groups would also appreciate financial help, since organizers must buy whatever they need that isn't donated. Send money for the Carmel Valley Community Thanksgiving Dinner to P.O. Box 149, Carmel Valley, CA 93924. To help support the Monterey Community Thanksgiving Dinner, send a check to 127 White Oaks Ln., Carmel Valley, CA 93924.

Oak disease leads to ban on berry picking, mushroom gathering

By TAMARA GRIPPI

WITH THOUSANDS of oaks dead in Big Sur, the California Department of Parks and Recreation announced a ban this week on berry picking and mushroom collecting at Andrew Molera State Park in an attempt to curb the spread of a disease dubbed Sudden Oak Death.

The illness, caused by a fungus called Phytophthora ramorum, is spread by spores that travel in moist soil, cling to branches and leaves, and can be spread by humans who walk or drive through infected areas

After a study found the fungus on the shoes of people leaving the park, officials posted guidelines asking visitors to clean mud from their shoes, mountain bikes, horse's hooves and pet's paws. They also recommend that people leaving the park "wash mud or soil off tires, wheel wells and the undercarriage of you vehicle at the nearest automated car wash."

"We want to make sure we're not making a situation that's already bad worse by inadvertently transferring the disease to other areas," said state parks spokesman Dave Schaechtele.

The agency has already had to remove 480 tanoaks and coast live oaks killed by sudden oak death at Pfeiffer Big Sur State Park. Big Sur Sector Superintendent Lois Harter explained that many more trees have been wiped out by the disease.

"We remove those trees that are dead or dying that present a hazard if they were to fall," Harter explained. "We've focused on developed areas in the park, but there are dead trees all over the park in the forested areas."

When looking at Big Sur as a whole — including Los Padres National Forest, private property and state parks lands — the sudden oak death toll stands "easily in the thousands," Harter said.

Rick Standiford, a member of the California Oak Mortality Task Force, explained that the most recent research indicates the disease does not usually spread from oak tree to oak tree.

Instead, Phytophthora ramorum is most likely transmitted to oaks from other species of trees that are hosts, including bay and madrone. Oaks are more often a "dead end" for the fungus.

Schaechtele explained that the felled oaks are not removed from state parklands, but instead are turned into mulch on site.

Monterey County is one of seven Northern California counties declared a sudden oak death "zone of infestation" by the California Department of Forestry and Fire Protection.

Symptoms of sudden oak death include seeping of dark liquid from the bark, followed by a rapid change in the color of the entire crown of the tree from green to brown. Beetles and other fungi often attack before the trees die.

Education Revenue Augmentation Fund.

Over the last 10 years, the City of Carmel has lost more than $1.3 million of its property taxes to the state, according to Sessums.

This past year, ERAF claimed $235,000 of Carmel's money. However, the city received approximately $105,000 back in the form of a Citizens Option for Public Safety grant.

The City of Monterey loses approximately $900,000 a year to the ERAF fund, according to finance director Don Rhoads. "There's not much hope of that reversing. We've had to adjust. What we're concerned about is not making it any worse."

Carmel City Administrator Rich Guillen said his biggest concern is ensuring the COPS grant and another police grant called the California Law Enforcement Equipment Program continue.

Guillen said the city has recently purchased laptops, a new all-terrain vehicle and an improved radio transmission system for the police department with those grant funds.

"We can't stop purchasing those pieces because public safety is always important to any community," Guillen said. "Then those funds would have to come out of the general fund."

Keeping an expensive promise?

Guillen and other city mangers are also wary about the fate of their share of vehicle license fees.

In 1998, in the midst of an economic boom, the state decided to decrease registration fees for car owners. When the cities and counties protested, the state offered to make up the difference.

Carmel, which received $221,000 in vehicle license fees last year, could stand to lose $150,000 if the state decides it can no longer afford to keep its promise, Sessums said.

Monterey could lose as much as $1 million annually if the state decides to pull its vehicle license funding to the cities.

"The state is getting ready for its mid-year review; I am fearful that review will include a look at what they're sending in vehicle license fees to the cities," Rhoads said.

A state take-away would "add insult to injury for cities such as Monterey, which has already been hit by a $2 million drop in sales and hotel taxes," Rhoads said.

"With a $21 billion state budget deficit, everything is on the table right now," Sessums said. "The state needs to solve the budget problem. And we need to convince the state not to balance the budget on the backs of the cities."

Carmel and Monterey have already joined with numerous jurisdictions across the state to hire lobbyists and launch a media campaign to fight the state's fiscal trend.

Ultimately, the League of California Cities would like to put an initiative on the ballot to bar the state from further dipping into local revenues, Sessums said. "We're having this conversation very year," she said. "We need a long-term solution."

DRIFTWOOD

cerned the heavy driftwood, which washed ashore after the storms two weeks ago, could do a lot of damage to the sea walls and the stairway if it was picked up by waves during high tide.

"Large pieces of driftwood become battering rams," Branson explained.

From the city's point of view, the few hundred dollars it cost to lift the two-ton, twisted behemoth from the beach was money well spent. Repairs to a damaged handrail or crumbling sea wall could easily add up to thousands of dollars.

'Large pieces of driftwood become battering rams.'

— Mike Branson

Branson said the driftwood was probably a Monterey cypress that grew near the coast. The twisted wood is likely the combination of a trunk contorted by the winds and roots wrapped around a rocky foundation.

The cypress may have fallen as early as the storms of 1998 and been wedged somewhere before being washed out to sea in the most recent storms, Branson surmised.

"It could have come from Pebble Beach or Point Lobos or points in between," he said.

The driftwood had not been waterlogged for long before it washed up on Carmel Beach, he said. If the wood had been floating in the ocean any length of time, it would appear more bleached and would have acquired a few small passengers such as barnacles or algae.

McCloud said she'd also be curious to see how people would respond to a Rorschach test of the gnarled wood.

"Let us know what kind of figure it is or name it," the mayor said, promising, "We're not going to sell it as a burl to someone who carves salad bowls."

homes in Carmel Valley. In March 2001, Henson, Erickson, Lehman and Lindstrom joined forces to require permits for all wells that tapped into the Carmel River aquifer or were within 1,000 feet of the river's five main tributaries.

The rocky, "upland" area the district voted this week to regulate is about five times bigger than the area covered by the old well ordinance. It contains 61 percent of the wells in Carmel Valley, according to MPWMD project manager Henrietta Stern. Because most property owners have no other way to get water, new wells are being drilled regularly.

"There has been a 150 percent increase since 1995 — 247 new wells," Stern said. But they don't produce much water.

"Despite their number, they account for only 3 percent of the total water production in the watershed," she said. Drilled in hard rock, the wells amount to "squeezing water out of a turnip."

Stern warned that processing the added permits would require 875 hours of staff time and cost $60,000 each year.

The new rules require property owners to:

■ prove they have the right to use the water under their land, and

■ begin construction within one year of the permit date and complete it within two years.

Some members of the public, including Carmel Valley Association representative Robert Greenwood, praised the new law.

"It imposes burdens on the operators of private wells as well as more work on district staff," he said. "However, until we have a [new water] supply, we remain obliged to monitor carefully all sources of water within the district."

But Monterey resident Marc Beique — who was defeated by Molly Erickson for a water board seat in 1999 — questioned the logic of spending so much energy to regulate a large area that produces only 414 acre-feet of water.

After motions were made to approve the new law, director Dave Potter said he supported it despite concerns about its costs and impact on staff, and then said he thought the district's reach should be extended further.

MPWMD does not regulate the single-user wells drilled in Carmel Highlands and Pebble Beach, an area Potter called "a gaping hole" in the water district's rules, even though those wells are overseen by the county health department.

Erickson indicated she would support expanding the permit requirement to cover Pebble Beach and the Highlands at a future meeting.

The board voted 5-2, with Pendergrass and director Alvin Edwards dissenting, to approve the ordinance, which will get a final review by the board Dec. 16.

Pine Needles

By Sissi Maleki

JOURNALISTS HAVE one idiosyncrasy that consistently gets them into trouble: the belief they can be instant experts on the topic they've reported on, just because they've spent some hours talking to the real experts.

Some of you may recall I recently wrote a piece on hummingbirds. Ever since then, I've become obsessed with birds.

If you see my dog with her legs crossed, it's because I don't want her to go out and disturb the birds that are feeding. If you hear a squealing of brakes, it's from the car behind me whose driver did NOT become awestruck with — let alone notice — the owl in the tree like I did. If you see a wild woman with a broom chasing after a cat, it's me, protecting my Tweetie birds.

You should see the acrylic bird feeder I got for them; I buy only the best for my new buddies. (Never mind that they haven't taken to it, yet; not everyone can learn to love I.M. Pei overnight.)

But why is it that experts always forget to tell you about practical matters? Such as, in my case, that what you help feed into one end of the tiny body, eventually has to come out the other end? And has to land somewhere, again and again and again?

Now, if I can only find an expert on potty training . . .

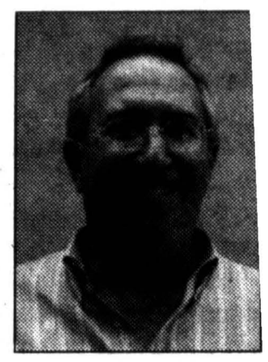
Peninsula a jazz world, after all

AS ALLUDED to in prior columns, jazz today for the most part dominates the clubscape on the Monterey Peninsula. With the demise of Doc's Nightclub so went rock 'n' roll and with the departure of Morgan Christopher and Barbara Murphy from the business of music promotion we, alas, lost our weekly gateway to the world of folk and ethnic music. Save for funk and blues at Sly McFly's and the Ocean Thunder, jazz for the most part rules the day.

Although the players pretty much remain the same, a recap is in order. At the Inn at Spanish Bay, Latin jazz stalwart Helcio Melito performs in the Lobby Lounge from 7 until 11 p.m. every Thursday through Sunday. A transplanted world-class Brazilian percussionist, Helcio is best known for having invented the tamba — tom-toms, pans and bamboo pipes. Melito, along with Antonio Carlos Jobim and Joao Gilberto, also created the Bossa Nova sound and introduced Brazilian music to North American audiences in the early '60s. His Tamba Trio recorded 16 albums, mostly on Polygram, which continue to sell in 76 countries.

Helcio has recorded with Quincy Jones, Wes Montgomery, Duke Ellington, Sammy Davis Jr., and many others. Brought to the Monterey Peninsula by former Pebble Beach manager John Chadwell, Melito always surrounds himself with an all-star cast of musicians including on occasion Brazilian pianist Weber Iago. For more information call 647-7500.

At Bernardus Lodge in Carmel Valley, pianist Dick Whittington performs weekly with a revolving cast of supporting players including world-class guitarist Bruce Foreman. Born and raised in Southern California Whittington learned to play piano by ear, striving to imitate the music of his vaudeville performing parents' collection of records by Duke Ellington, Benny Goodman, Nat Cole and Count Basie. At 16 he discovered Art Tatum and Oscar Peterson and sought out piano teacher Sam Saxe, who introduced him to the music of Bud Powell and Charlie Parker.



Plugged In

By Stephen L. Vagnini

In college Whittington formed a quintet that featured, at times, Scott LaFaro, Billy Higgins, Charles Lloyd and Don Cherry and while he pursued a degree in education from Cal State Northridge, he kept up his chops touring and playing with Ernestine Anderson, Barney Kessell, Bobby Hutcherson, Dinah Washington and Anita O'Day. For several months he performed in tenor great Dexter Gordon's group which brought him north to San Francisco.

While living in the Bay Area he helped develop the innovative jazz program in Berkeley's public school system and presented concerts at the Maybeck Recital Hall. Concord Jazz has produced an internationally acclaimed series of solo piano concerts there titled "Live at Maybeck Recital Hall." Now a resident of the Monterey Peninsula, Whittington has recorded as a leader with bassist Steve Gilmore and drummer Bill Goodwin. For times and more info call 659-3131.

Highlands Inn is yet another peninsula haunt for jazz lovers and features pianist Martin Headman performing every Friday and Saturday night from 9 until 11 as well on Mondays and Tuesdays. An honor student of Boston's prestigious Berklee College of Music, Headman studied under composer-in-residence Michael Gibbs and jazz master Gary Burton. A 1997 and 1998 ASCAP award recipient, Headman has created and published a large repertoire of compositions that are rich, inventive and timeless. He has released four CDs on Shubert Records: "Time & Again," "South Point," "Solo Piano" and "Should Have Been Here Yesterday." Call the Highlands Inn at 624-3801.

■ Culinary Classique now a must-attend event

If Meals on Wheels wasn't already on your Rolodex, put it on now. Its annual Culinary Classique at the Marriott, which combines chef mastery with table design creativity, now sells out months before the event . . . Kathy Kandler was originally the one to think up assembling different table designs to complement the efforts of event creator and Chef Bert Cutino. This year, prior to the dinner, she kept an anxious eye on her watch, as there were still a few designers finishing up as the reception began. "But things run much more smoothly now," she added. In the meantime, hubby Paul was taking photos for his wife . . . Millie Brown caught up with good friends, board member Mary May and board prez Mary Ann Pirotte, who have been so devoted to MOW for so long . . . Official design photographer Bob Stone had a very personal reason for volunteering his time to take pictures. Bob had been a very successful N.Y. fashion photographer with assignments for Vogue and the like when he suddenly became very ill and came out here to recover. That's when he discovered Meals on Wheels. "I was so touched by how beautifully the food was arranged; so much thought had been put into it and the older man who delivered it was so thoughtful and kind," Bob recalls. "I never forgot it." . . . Joe Heslin recalled the many purchases wife Judy made over the year, including in Italy, just to assemble a table for this event . . . Jackie Craghead's granddaughter Tiffany Riley, 16, designed one of the tables for the first time. But she had to miss out on the actual event because of a scheduled camping trip ... Other first-time table designers included Kim Gill and Renee Kelly (whose design partner was Barbara Booker) . . . Monique Gardiner found out no one had ever used the Christmas theme before — so her choice was clear! . . . Debbie Neiman, with hubby Cary, raved about the event. "It's the most fabulous one I've ever been to," she said . . . Skip Keyzers, there with wife Joan, sported quite a crew cut. Was he joining the Army? "Well, I was in the Navy and I'm just reliving my youth," he joked. Actually, he recently met up with his Fort Ord boot camp buddy and they checked out their old haunts from 1959, driving in Skip's restored '59 Thunderbird . . . Pat Ramsey's named her

'Unnecessary Targets' aims for the heart — of war

By BEVERLY HILL VAN JOOLEN

theater review

WAR ISN'T sexy. It isn't clean, it isn't precise, and it doesn't go away once the bombs stop and the TV cameras leave. War creates filth. It leaves in its wake a path of mutilated lives and crippled minds. Like afterbirth, this after battle muck requires acknowledgment and analyzation. It needs attention before rebuilt cities can thrive or treaties can succeed. It is to this reality, to this heart of war, that playwright Eve Ensler aims her powerful pen.

It is 1993 and thousands of Bosnian refugees live in camps. Ensler's story focuses on five of these women and the two Americans sent to help them. To succeed, J.S. and Melissa must become "necessary targets" of the refugees' anger in order to gain their trust. It isn't easy. In addition to the appalling living conditions, walls of fear and denial must be breached. Before they can even begin to help the Bosnians, the Americans must reconcile their own ignorance and ambitions.

The artistry of this ensemble cast is remarkable. The actresses flow through scenes and set changes with an almost ritualistic grace and ease. Deirdre McCauley is strikingly cliché as J.S., a shrink with a private practice, predictable clients and a designer suitcase. As Melissa, a war trauma specialist, Julie Retzlaff presents an uncanny coolness and eerie detachment.

The aspirations and ethical codes of the two Americans collide from the start. Paradoxically, it is the courage and camaraderie of the Bosnian women that create an atmosphere for healing to begin.

Zlata, once head of a pediatrics department, is played by Teresa Del Piero with caustic intensity. Carol Daly is Jelena, a housewife with a lusty abandon that ripples over the agony of her pain. Karen Strutynski as Seada, a young mother locked in a fantasy world, exudes an aching torture. Azra, an old dairy woman mourning her cow, is portrayed with heart wrenching longing by Cherie Bozlee. Youngest of the refugees is Nuna, a half-Serbian half-Bosnian teenager. Marielle Murphy plays the teen with an instinctive spirit.

The show is staged in the intimate Circle Theatre of the Golden Bough. Minimal but effective set design is employed and the atmosphere is enhanced with live footage and an accordionist prior to the show. Costumes, by consultant Kathryn Hart, are uncomplicated and symbolic. Lighting and sounds are by John Rousseau.

TARGETS

Directed by Jeanne McCulloch, "Necessary Targets" isn't all heavy emotion and desperation. At times it's earthy and funny, and these women come off as real and extremely likable. It also avoids sloppy sentimentality and pointed propaganda, focusing instead on the universal experience of loss. Loss of property, loss of loved ones, loss of innocence and trust in basic societal decency.

Do humans harbor a fundamental flaw? Given the right combination of circumstances and conditions, can and will latent internal "monsters" be released? After all the horror she's witnessed, Melissa admits, "It's what we can't see that frightens me." In light of recent global events, how disturbingly relevant her observation is. Quills up!

■ "Necessary Targets" will have final performances at 7:30 p.m. Friday and Saturday and 2 p.m. Sunday, Nov. 22-24 in Carmel's Circle Theatre of the Golden Bough. For reservations, call 625-1388.

Crispo's painting at Smithsonian

By MARGOT PETIT NICHOLS

DICK CRISPO, well-known Carmel-by-the-Sea artist, art historian and teacher, has been notified that one of his paintings has been added to the archives of American art in the Smithsonian's permanent collection. It was selected as "an innovation in the field of marine paintings."

Crispo told The Pine Cone, "I have no idea what they're going to do with it; I imagine it will be in the National Museum."

The impasto oil painting on canvas measures 20 by 30 inches and is entitled "El Niño Twist in the Sea." The artist said he produced about 60 paintings of El Niño, but the one selected by the Smithsonian was unique. "It occurred in Carmel Bay; it was a fascinating experience," he said. "Color wise and texture wise, I caught the twist. It looked bizarre; it's a different look at the ocean — the turmoil made different patterns. I picked up on those."

Dick Crispo

He said that artists don't get paid when their art is selected by the Smithsonian, but he considered it an honor to have his painting in the museum's collection.

"I have a woodblock in the Library of Congress, and my paintings are in about 30 museums around the world," he said. "I'm fortunate in that way."

Crispo is a long-standing member of the Carmel Art Association.

OPINION

Editorial

The best show in town

NEXT MONTH'S meeting of the California Coastal Commission in San Francisco promises to be great theater. Not only that, but a lot of important decisions will be made. Anybody with an interest in coastal protection, land use, historic preservation, property rights, state government, power politics or just plain old human nature should make it a point to attend.

The first order or business will be the election of the chair of the commission — a post that has been held for three years by an ultra-environmentalist from Malibu, Sara Wan. She lives in a mansion on a cliffside above the Pacific Ocean, but she works as hard as she can to make sure nobody else gets to. Her devotion to the "no development" cause has won her the devotion of activists across the state and the adoration of her immediate boss, State Senate President John Burton. But their fealty has apparently given Wan an exaggerated idea of her own importance to the extent that she isn't satisfied with keeping oil wells and new subdivisions away from California beaches. With the help of the commission's indefatigable staff, Wan also wants to control a million purely local matters up and down the coast. Among other things, under her leadership the commission has tried to dictate parking rules in Carmel-by-the-Sea, force the city to reduce the size of new homes by 200 square feet and overturn the results of a recent municipal election by taking control of Carmel's rules for preserving old homes.

This tireless meddling has earned Wan the enmity of local officials, business people and property owners from Eureka to San Diego and, more importantly, has also eroded her support among two of the people who control the coastal commission, Governor Gray Davis and Assembly Speaker Herb Wesson. The scuttlebutt around the state capital is that they've made up their minds to replace Wan with Monterey County Supervisor — and longtime coastal commissioner — Dave Potter, a man with solid environmentalist credentials who also shows at least a smidgen of concern for the supplicants who appear before the commission seeking a permit for one thing or another.

Wan apparently got wind of a move to unseat her and sought to preempt it by hurriedly scheduling a vote on her chairmanship at the last coastal commission meeting in San Diego. To her great embarrassment, the maneuver failed. Instead of getting another term, she was handed a 7-5 defeat. Her successor is expected to be chosen in San Francisco.

But it is by no means certain Wan won't somehow grab victory from the jaws of humiliation. Even now, desperate lobbying on her behalf — what one veteran observer of the coastal commission called a "bloodbath" — is under way. Anything could happen. And it probably will.

The commission is also scheduled to vote on the first part of Carmel's Local Coastal Program. Several vital local issues are at stake. So is the city's democratic form of government, in that a solid council majority, with the undisputed backing of most of the city's voters, has staked out its position on a host of local concerns — many of them in direct opposition to what has been recommended by the coastal commission's staff. Who will win? There is no way to know. But it is certain that this part of the Dec. 10-13 meeting will be fascinating.

So plan to do some Christmas shopping in The City and make your reservations at the Hyatt Regency Embarcadero now. The coastal commission meeting will be a show you won't want to miss.

No I don't . . .

Dear Editor,

In your article entitled, "Storm Threatened Threatened Fish" (Nov. 15), you wrote: "Just one resident gave a partial endorsement to the barrier idea. 'My biggest concern is not my view. It is that the environment is protected.'" Your interpretation of my statement is incorrect. In no way do I endorse the barrier, which is called a dam on the map residents were given, that Alan Williams has proposed. On July 10, 2002, I wrote to Supervisor Dave Potter that "I am appalled at the idea of a wall that would forever change the beautiful nature of the lagoon. As a homeowner on the lagoon and a person dedicated to the environment, I find it devastating to think of the natural turmoil such a structure would cause." As well, from a telephone interview I had with her, Mary Brownfield noted in a Pine Cone article (July 19) that I was opposed to the wall. Please correct the false impression you have given your readers about my stance on the lagoon wall. I am completely opposed to it and fervently hope the parties involved can come up with a different solution that is kinder to the wetlands.

. . . Yes we do

Dear Editor,

Your article in last week's Pine Cone describing the meeting on the proposed flood wall around the Carmel River Lagoon mischaracterized that meeting and its outcome. The consensus reached was exactly the opposite of one of total opposition. Rather, the consensus was that the county and other agencies would proceed with the studies needed to determine the ultimate feasibility of the project. Moreover, it was decided that MORE stakes and outlining would be done and the proposed material would be displayed in the neighborhood, which is scarcely consistent with a verdict of "No way, Jose."

You reported that aside from Kathleen Jackson, no resident expressed even a "partial endorsement." Larry Morago said that the problem at hand is a grave one; many people have spent a lot of effort to come up with a solution, and unless someone had a better one to present, we should listen to and examine this alternative. I am at a loss to explain how you missed this contribution because it was loud and clear and the other attendees surely heard it.

The operative word here is "listen" and I would respectfully request that you do the same. This little community of people is struggling to come to grips with an emerging threat to their homes and peace of mind occasioned by recent governmental rulings. It isn't helpful to try to paint them as self-centered NIMBYs uncaring about the environment around them. The next time you report on a meeting concerning this subject, please listen to what is really happening and not hear only what you thought would be said.

'More like a warning siren'

Dear Editor,

Thanks for your informative article (Nov. 15) about "the Carmel Whistling Man." Now I know when NOT to visit the post office. Your article implies that the majority enjoys his obsession but I can tell you that most people I've talked to, including at least two post office employees, find this idiotic behavior more than just irritating. His whistling sounds like birds? Get real . . . It's more like a warning siren to stay away.

Awash in pine needles

Dear Editor,

Our recent storm has covered us with pine needles. I think our residents need to be reminded that if we are concerned citizens we do not wash our driveways and the street with water making piles of debris that the street cleaner equipment cannot pick up. Going back and forth is his way of trying to deal with the damp piles. He needs cooperation, not denigration.

Carmel's charm

Dear Editor,

My father, mother, and I moved from Nebraska to Carmel in about 1938. I was about 12. What a transition! My first day at Sunset Grammar School I wore overalls. After the reception I received, it was the last day I ever wore overalls.

The first three houses we lived in were board 'n bat — we never called them "board and batten." The last one we lived in was quite breezy, but we loved all three — they were home to us.

Within a year I had a paper route and it covered the area south of Ocean Ave. to Santa Lucia and San Carlos west to Scenic. I discovered then that there were a lot of board 'n bats in Carmel and they all had names — if you could you find them — and geraniums. Board 'n bat homes that took the paper all had a name somewhere . . . mostly covered by geraniums.

Geraniums also covered most of the walkways so where do you throw the paper? I soon found out the hard way. The boss would get a "kick" (complaint) saying someone didn't get a paper. So I'd hop on my bike and dig under the geraniums, find it, and take it to the door. After awhile I found out exactly where each "kicker" wanted their paper.

I did gardening work, too, and soon was working for some of the "kickers." My main work was, yes, cleaning up the geraniums. Wherever I could I would make more of the walkway visible. As you can tell I really got involved with board 'n bat houses. My next involvement was working for M.J. Murphy replacing mud-sills with concrete foundations. Unfortunately, in doing that, I had to dig up a lot of geraniums, in some cases ones that I had previously picked on.

Through the years and even now, when visiting Carmel, I drive up and down those streets looking for those board 'n bats with which I fell in love. Unfortunately, they are gradually disappearing. I know there those in Carmel who support my point of view. Please join them in their battle for the board 'n bats. Now I must end this plea, so I can water my geraniums.

Didn't think it was funny

Dear Editor,

The Bates cartoon you published on Nov. 1 is not funny. ("I'm telling you, Alice, you can't use white-out on a computer.")

By printing it, you have unnecessarily insulted a large segment of our population: senior women.

Shame on you.

News from Rotary Club of Carmel-by-the-Sea

The Rotary Club of Carmel-by-the-Sea welcomed a delegation of Russian tourism professionals who arrived on October 31 and will depart on November 23. The delegation was sponsored by the Monterey Peninsula Rotary Clubs with the host club being Rotary Club of Carmel-by-the-Sea. While in the Monterey Bay area, the Russian delegation learned business management techniques, training with local American tourism providers, and about the "American way of life," living with local families.

Thanks to the generous donation of time and effort on the part of the local Rotary Clubs, training sessions were arranged with a variety of top level tourism experts from public and private enterprises. "With tourism being the second largest industry in the county, we have many industry experts who have been excited about sharing their ideas with the delegation," said Gary Luce, a member of the Rotary Club of Carmel-by-the-Sea and local coordinator for the Russian group.

"Carmel Legends"

When we were introduced to Carmel in the 1960's, a local friend living there first took us to the Carmel Post Office on Fifth and Dolores Streets. She said, "You don't get mail delivered to your home in Carmel. You pick it up here, at the Post Office. So get yourself a box right now."

"Why don't they deliver mail to your house?", we asked. "I don't know for sure," he replied, "but it could have something to do with the fact that there are no numbered addresses for the houses in Carmel." She explained that if you invited a friend to come visit you at your home, you simply told them you were the third house southwest of So-and-So Street and Eighth Street. So you drive to that corner intersection, and then count so many houses north or south or east or west of that intersection. "All you really need to be sure of is that you know which way is east or west, north or south. And that's easy... the beach is west, Highway One is east, Pebble Beach is north, and Big Sur is south."

She turned to leave, having covered the only things she thought I needed to know on mail in Carmel. In all the years since, her advise has proved to be excellent. She did urge me to try to get a box with a low letter or number, and not one in the back of the hall with the then-new numbered boxes. "That's Siberia," she said with a tiny smile. "My, you do take your Post office very seriously," we replied. "Oh, it's very important," she fired back at us. "It's here you will meet everyone in town, and hear all the latest news that's worth knowing in Carmel."

Lincoln Street's new asphalt paves way for undergrounding wires

PINE CONE STAFF REPORT

THREE WELL-TRAVELED blocks received a much-needed asphalt facelift this week along with a below-the-surface improvement that will one day make it easier for Carmel to hide utility wires underground.

Lincoln Street, from Fifth Avenue to Ocean Avenue, and Sixth Avenue, between Lincoln and Monte Verde, received a fresh layer of pavement.

Crews from Monterey Peninsula Engineering used the most advanced equipment on the job, including a "grinder," with rotating blades able to lift a whole strip of old asphalt from the street as it slowly moves forward and immediately transfer that material on a conveyer belt to a waiting dump truck. The ground-up asphalt will be recycled.

Before the crews set down new pavement, they installed an underground conduit that will be used when the city has the funding to put its utility wires under ground.

"Because the conduit is already there, it will be much cheaper to put the wires under ground later on," said Carmel Public Works Director Jim Cullem.

A sophisticated paving machine — which lays the asphalt 12 feet wide in a continuous ribbon — made short work of the paving job. "This is the latest technology," Cullem said.

Close to 500 tons of asphalt — heated to 300 degrees — was trucked in from Aromas by a steady procession of 12 trucks.

The price tag for the paving job was approximately $100,000 — which includes the $30,000 to install the underground conduits.

The city had originally planned to repave other sections of town this year — including five blocks of Mission Street — but had to put those projects on hold because of the recession.

The Lincoln Street blocks were in poor condition and had been at the top of the list of streets needing to be repaved. "This one was probably among the worst," Cullem said.

Citing what he called the "horrible" taste of water delivered by Cal-Am Water Co., Henson urged the water board to seize control of the company's local facilities. Despite objections from many members of the public and Cal-Am's pledge to fight it, the board voted 4-3, with Henson, Lehman, Lindstrom and Erickson in favor, to look into what it might cost to undertake eminent domain proceedings against the water company.

Henson said people need not search too hard for reasons why the district should be the local water supplier.

"You can start by trying to drink the water but should also look at the investments made in the water supply in last 50 years by the water company," Henson said. "The Paralta Well in Seaside and four wells in the lower Carmel Valley aquifer — that's been their sum total investment."

He accused Cal-Am of failing to deal with silt problems behind its Carmel River dams and called its water lines "decrepit."

But his proposal that the district consider eminent domain proceedings against Cal-Am received little support outside the board majority.

"The interest of a water company is to provide water and this district has not indicated it is capable of organizing itself to provide water," former water board director Edwin Lee commented. "I suggest you not spend any more time or money on this proposal."

Instead, he said, the district should spend its resources on a Carmel River dam or the desalination and underground water storage projects known as Plan B.

Greenwood, typically supportive of the water district, said he hadn't had a chance to discuss the matter with the Carmel Valley Association board but was "sufficiently exercised" to comment on the idea of taking over Cal-Am.

"The district has enough on its plate, namely the design and implementation of a water supply project," he said. "This is the worst possible time for the district to take on another series of tasks and challenges."

Steve Leonard, vice president and manager of Cal-Am's Monterey division, doubted the district could handle the full-time job of running a water company and said his employer has no interest in selling.

"We do not believe this board should spend one cent to take Cal-Am, and we will do whatever we can to make sure our ratepayers do not pay for one cent of a study on it," he said. (Cal-Am customers pay a surcharge on their water bills that goes to the water district.)

"Condemnation is expensive, divisive and will not produce one drop of water — the thing our customers need most," Leonard said.

Bob McKenzie warned the board against giving more ammunition to the people who expressed their dissatisfaction on election day.

"It may have escaped your notice, but three weeks ago the people you serve decided 2-to-1 you're doing a lousy job," he said. "Now you're finding more activities to do a lousy job at. Don't move forward with this."

Nonetheless, Henson proposed the district spend $15,000 to figure out how much it would cost ratepayers to take over Cal-Am, a motion seconded by Lehman.

"Cal-Am gets up and says they oppose this, so I have to wonder: What are they hiding?" Henson asked. "I think we owe it to the ratepayers of this community to at least begin an investigation."

Erickson added her opinion that Cal-Am is a "big obstacle" to solving water supply problems because it is "still clinging to the dam," but she objected to an immediate allocation of $15,000 toward taking it over.

So Henson changed his motion and asked that the district's staff come up with a preliminary plan of action.

Pendergrass, Edwards and Potter objected.

"We're looking at a large hole we're going to throw money down, and the only people who will benefit are consultants and attorneys," Potter said. "I don't see any benefit to the public, and short of having a printing press in the basement, I don't think we can fund it."
